

One Day In Brighton ...

Oh my god, we went to Brighton, but Miss we have to make a move to Brighton Pier. I don't know what is most impressive : these huge waves throwing themselves on the bay or the impressive number of attractions ... Everyone finds his happiness, you don't like money machines? No problem, dozens of fast food can keep you busy for the day ! And yes, Brighton Pier is able to charm you. for a day, impossible to get bored there. But obviously, the teachers said, "We stay just for lunch": what a tear... it's at that moment that all my dreams are gone, and the pigeons too. The pigeons have indeed kept us company throughout our lunch, fun for someone but less for others! See you soon Brighton Pier.

After some pictures, and a tray of very good fries and one hot dog later, it was time to take a little digestive walk in the streets of Brighton. I can tell you that the atmosphere is really great, and I'm not saying that to pleasure Ms. Juillon. Now, place at the most important visit of this day, the long awaited Royal Pavilion. Its architecture, which you can see in the photos, is very exotic, indeed it is inspired by that of India, very popular at the time. Thanks to our personal guided tour, we discovered that this palace was built in the early nineteenth century for the prince and future king of the time George IV. This prince was really in awe of his flag, which he loved very much. He installed a friendly decor because Goerges IV loved to receive and organize huge banquets, so rooms were made available for these guests since this kind of party ended very late. These immense meals would not be possible the kitchens of the palace, they were immense and the prince was very proud of it, he made them visit his guests, and ate with them inside. It's a must see place !
