

THE ROYAL PAVILION

While we were in Brighton for the school trip, we visited the Royal Pavilion, known for its special architecture which reminds the Taj Mahal with these spheric roof domes (added in 1822) and was built in 1787 in order to serve George IV, Prince of Wales. The building in itself has a beautiful interior with a chinese style such as the furniture with dragons or traditional chinese statues. Thanks to the guided tour by an audio guide we can say that The Royal Pavilion also has a large number of rooms. Unfortunately, we were unable to take pictures since this was forbidden by the Royal Pavilion's staff. We reckon that is the best visit we had during this school trip because we were able to discover a lot of interesting elements like how was a dinner that the king organized. We also enjoy the little historical details that have been presented like the reconstruction of some Pavilion's room with their cause, this makes the presentation of the pavillon more interesting for us.

To conclude, we think that Royal Pavilion is one of the places that you have to go if you travel to England (and especially near Brighton).
