

The Royal Pavilion

The Royal Pavilion is a historic monument, in Brighton. It was built in the early XIXe, as a seaside pleasure and was designed in an exotic architectural style like in an Anglo-Indian spirit. It has an interesting story about the King George IV. At one time, it even served as a hospital for the First World War.

We visited it and I will make discover our visit through some important details that can make you want to go and visit it in your turn.

First of all, you have the possibility to visit all the garden around the palace to discover more and appreciate all the visit with different plants, a little basin with water. All the wall facades are white and very bright, which brings a more joyful mood.

Then, inside, you even have the possibility to do the visit with the languages that you want like French, English, German... But there is an inconvenience which is the ban to take pictures. During the visit, we can see the whole life of George IV with all the furniture like the royal bed and some samples of the life at that time. We can also see a model of the the Royal Pavilion and others models, thanks to the museum.

You have also a souvenir shop in which you can find postcards, books, clothes, office accessories, food and of course a English flag and other things...

For me, it was one of the best visits that we have made because the architecture was really impressive and the visit was really rewarding because you learn one of the part of the England story and deepen its general culture. We also can made the difference between France and England at the same time. The Royal Pavilion will remain one of the unforgettable moments of this travel.

IF YOU GO THERE, ENJOY YOUR VISIT !
