

The trip in England

The Natural History Museum: a beautiful place!

The entrance of the museum

Here is the head of a parasaurolophus an herbivore who lived during the cretaceous.

The museum was one of the thing I was waiting the most of all. And that was indeed just for one purpose: admire the dinosaurs. This passion dates back to my youngest days and I keep it. So when I saw all those skeleton, fossil and mechanical dinosaurs I was the most happier of the world. I couldn't help myself but to take photos of practically everything in that part of the museum.

But the dinosaurs weren't the only thing in the museum there was the huge whale in front of you just when you go inside. We also saw a big megatherium on the right, a mammoth, and an iguanodon so that was just magnificent. Personally that was the visit I appreciated the most.
